INSPIRED BY NORVAL MORRISSEAU
HIS LEGACY FOR 11 CANADIAN ARTISTS

Revered as the Michelangelo, or grandfather, of contemporary Indigenous art in Canada, Norval Morrisseau was known for his larger-than-life style. Here's a look at how and why his legacy lives bright.

By editor Carmen Robertson shares in NFTs Spirit Morrisseau Life & Work, Norval Morrisseau: Shaman by the Lake and Norval Morrisseau: Man Changing into Thunderbird at Thomas Deluce Gallery. He first met Morrisseau in the early 1990s when working in contemporary art galleries in Canada. Morrisseau's oeuvre is extraordinary in its complexity and scope, and his life story is one of both triumph and tragedy. Robertson's research has focused on the artist's relationship with his dealers and the art market. Here, she explains why Morrisseau had generated a new generation of creators.

Norval Morrisseau, Man Changing into Thunderbird, 1977, acrylic on canvas, 152.4 × 121.9 cm, private collection

Starting Oddy With 2018 was a pioneering Woodland School artist and founding member of Professional Native Indian Artists Inc. in 1972. He went liberated abstraction and Norval Morrisseau's style, which he had learned from the master himself, to create his own unique visual language. Oddy's work is known for its bold, graphic lines and abstracted storytelling with European art, as seen in works like Spirit Fish, C.1975. Oddy's work is in the collections of the Art Gallery of Ontario, the Canada Council Art Bank and the Thunder Bay Art Gallery, among others. He died in 2018 at the age of 77.

Learn more about Stanley Oddy

THE INDIAN IN TRANSITION, 1978
by Hayley Edge

Stanley Oddy, The Academy, 2008, acrylic on canvas, 91.4 × 121.9 cm, private collection, Toronto

Stanley Oddy (1941–2018) was a pioneering Woodland School artist and a founding member of Professional Native Indian Artists Inc. in 1972. He went liberated abstraction and Norval Morrisseau's style, which he had learned from the master himself, to create his own unique visual language. Oddy's work is known for its bold, graphic lines and abstracted storytelling with European art, as seen in works like Spirit Fish, C.1975. Oddy's work is in the collections of the Art Gallery of Ontario, the Canada Council Art Bank and the Thunder Bay Art Gallery, among others. He died in 2018 at the age of 77.

Learn more about Stanley Oddy

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE OF THE ANISHINAABE PEOPLE, 2013
by Christian Chapman

Christian Chapman, Past, Present and Future of the Anishinaabe People, 2013, private collection

Anishinaabe multidisciplinary artist Christian Chapman (b. 1983) is a member of Sagkeeng First Nation. His work, which is outstanding contemporary examples of Woodland School art, is known for its bold colours and graphic lines. It often narrates about Indigenous People. Chapman's 2013 painting Past, Present and Future of the Anishinaabe People is a visual representation of the Seven Sacred Teachings, as well as a Princess Cafferata, to separate people abstract with Anishinaabe beliefs. The work is in the collection of the Manitoba Museum, which is home of outstanding cultural artifacts, and the Canada Council Art Bank.

Learn more about Christian Chapman

DOUBLE FAKE DOUBLE MORRISSEAU, 2021
by Thomas, Art Department International

Norval Art Department International, Double Fake Double Morrisseau, 2021, private collection

Norval Art Department International (NADI) is an Indigenous art collective founded by Duane Linklater, Dayna Danger and Jason Lujan (b.1977). Through their collaborative practice, they explore the complexities of Indigenous identity and how it intersects with art, cultural reflection, to Double Fake Double Morrisseau, a painting that plays with the idea of authenticity by commissioning its work and by seemingly appropriating Norval Morrisseau's style. The piece is a critique of marketplace, a tribute to exploitation and commodification, and questions the boundaries between artistic expression and cultural ownership.

Learn more about Norval Art Department International

SEVEN IN STEEL, 1989
by Robert Houle

Robert Houle, Born in Steel, 1989, National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa

As part of the broader legacy of Indigenous contemporary art, Robert Houle's Born in Steel (1989) and Seven in Steel (1989) is influenced by the work of Norval Morrisseau. Houle's monumental paintings, which are now in the collections of the National Gallery of Canada and the Art Gallery of Ontario, respectively, reflect Indigenous artists in the 1980s and 1990s who were grappling with the complexities of modernity, urbanization and environmental destruction. The artist's fusion of abstraction with Indigenous iconography and his exploration of Western modernity. The choice of steel, a material associated with industrialization and technological progress, underscores the tension between Indigenous spirituality and the realities of the modern world.

Read more in NFTs Robert Houle + Life & Work by Hayley Edge

SPIRIT FISH, C.1975
by Carl Ray

Carl Ray, Spirit Fish, c.1975, Birchwood Cassette Art Collection, Winnipeg

Cree artist Carl Ray (1943–1978) was an avid reader and a self-taught painter. Ray's work, which is known for its bold colours and graphic lines, often narrates about Indigenous People. Ray's Spirit Fish, C.1975 is a visual representation of the artist's daring turn to his traditional focus on spirituality and mythology, which was influenced by Norval Morrisseau's style. Ray's work is in the collections of the Art Gallery of Ontario and the Canada Council Art Bank, among others. He died in 1978 at the age of 35, leaving behind a powerful and atmospheric depth. Through his art, Ray brought Cree legends and an Indigenous worldview to a broader audience, ensuring their place in Canada's narrative and representation.

Learn more about Carl Ray

Our Friday Newsletters Are Supported By You.

Art Canada Institute is 100% donor-funded. If you like our work, please consider helping us to continue in business.

THE ACADEMY, 2008
by Ernie Mandamin

Stanley Oddy, The Academy, 2008, private collection, Toronto

In The Academy (2008), Cree artist Ernie Mandamin (b.1948) uses humour to link Norval Morrisseau, a central figure in the rise of the image, as an artist to whom working as a painting in the 1960s and 1970s, and the contemporary art world. Mandamin's painting, which is in the collection of the Art Gallery of Ontario, depicts a group of artists in a gallery setting. Mandamin's artistic recognized for his provocative, boundary-pushing work that often challenges the viewer to think critically about the role of art in society.

Read more in NFTs Ernie Mandamin + Life & Work by Hayley Edge

THE ONE THE ELDERS KEPT FROM THE SCHOOL, 2018
by Jim Logan

Jim Logan, The One the Elders Kept from the School, 2018, Crooked Creek Art Bank, Ottawa

Métis artist Jim Logan (b.1960) explores the complexities of Indigenous identity, history and culture through a fusion of colours, traditions, and the ongoing challenges of contemporary life. His work, which is in the collection of the Art Bank from 2018, was deeply influenced by the artistic legacy of Norval Morrisseau. Logan studied under Morrisseau's former partner and fellow artist Carl Ray, whose mentorship helped him develop a distinctive style that reflects his Indigenous people. He emphasizes lived experiences in his art, reflecting on the intergenerational trauma caused by residential schools and the resilience of his heritage while drawing on contemporary issues and personal stories.

Learn more about Jim Logan

GEORGE & THE EAGLE, 2024
by Joel Rickenbrick and Yahk Allegra Johnson

Joel Rickenbrick and Yahk Allegra Johnson, George & The Eagle, 2024, courtesy of the artists

Joel Rickenbrick (b.1977) and Yahk Allegra Johnson (b.1977) are a married couple and artists based in Calgary, Alberta, specializing in large-scale public murals. Their collaborative practice often explores Indigenous storytelling, cultural revitalization, and the relationship between people and the land. Their mural George & The Eagle (2024) honours Elder George Arcand Jr. and Commander George Redcrow, alongside a Cree syllabic inscription and a depiction of a bald eagle. The mural was created to help end a cycle of violence in the community and to promote healing and reconciliation. It is a powerful example of emerging traditional Indigenous stories with contemporary concerns.

Learn more about Rickenbrick and Johnson's collaborative Superchromatic Map, Yahk Johnson's website

THE WIND SPIRIT, 1976
by Alvin Ahenakew

Alvin Ahenakew, The Wind Spirit, 1976, The Forks, Winnipeg, Manitoba

Anishinaabe artist Alvin Ahenakew (1939–2020), a member of Sandy Bay First Nation, was a prominent figure in the Woodlands artists in the 1970s. Ahenakew's 1976 mural The Wind Spirit at The Forks in Winnipeg, Manitoba, blends storytelling, cultural symbolism, and a deep connection to nature. The mural's vibrant colours and dynamic composition reflect Ahenakew's dedication to preserving Indigenous knowledge and spirituality. After creating art for over four decades, he passed away in 2020, leaving behind a powerful legacy that continues to inspire artists and viewers alike. His work remains a testament to the resilience and creativity of Indigenous communities.

Learn more about Alvin Ahenakew

DRUMMING PARTRIDGE
by Jackie Kafegineis

Jackie Kafegineis, Drumming Partridge, n.d., courtesy of Indians Earth, Toronto

Cree artist Jackie Kafegineis (1940–1980) was born in Moose Factory, Ontario. He was a member of the Moose Cree First Nation and began painting in the 1960s. Kafegineis's work, which is in the collection of the Indians Earth, Toronto, reflects the influence of Norval Morrisseau's bold lines and dynamic compositions he across. Both the spiritual and natural worlds, often incorporating animals and mythological themes. His art is celebrated for its vibrant colours and intricate detailing, which showcase the richness of Indigenous heritage as well as addressing the ongoing struggles he faced, marriage, and addiction.

Learn more about Jackie Kafegineis

UNTITLED (SHAMAN AND RAVEN), C.1962
by Saul Williams

Saul Williams, Untitled (Shaman and Raven), c.1962, private collection

Anishinaabe artist and educator Saul Williams (1919–1962) was a devout generalist Woodland School artist known for his vibrant, expressive paintings that often drew on Ojibwe culture. He refused to be one of the first artists to be recognized by the Canadian government, and his work has been shown in galleries across Canada and the United States. Williams's Untitled (Shaman and Raven) (c.1962) is a powerful example of the Woodland School style, characterized by bold lines, dynamic compositions, and a deep connection to Indigenous spirituality and storytelling. The piece reflects Williams's dedication to preserving Ojibwe traditions and his ability to adapt them to a modern context. His work remains a testament to the resilience and creativity of Indigenous communities.

Learn more about Saul Williams

THANK YOU TO OUR BENEFACTORS

The ACI is a not-for-profit educational charity that receives no government funding. Our work is made possible by the generous support of our benefactors.

If you would like to support our important work, please click here.

FOLLOW ACI ON INSTAGRAM

We have as great art in Canada

Image Credits: Bill Reid (Haida), c.1955, Bentwood box with Raven, Frog, Whale and Sea, Bill Reid Gallery of Northwest Coast Art, Vancouver; Norval Morrisseau (Anishinaabe), Man Changing into Thunderbird, 1977, acrylic on canvas, 152.4 × 121.9 cm, private collection; Stanley Oddy (Anishinaabe), The Academy, 2008, acrylic on canvas, 91.4 × 121.9 cm, private collection, Toronto; Norval Morrisseau (Anishinaabe), Man Changing into Thunderbird, 1977, acrylic on canvas, 152.4 × 121.9 cm, private collection; Christian Chapman (Anishinaabe), Past, Present and Future of the Anishinaabe People, 2013, private collection; Norval Art Department International (NADI), Double Fake Double Morrisseau, 2021, private collection; Robert Houle (Saulteaux), Born in Steel, 1989, National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa; Carl Ray (Cree), Spirit Fish, c.1975, Birchwood Cassette Art Collection, Winnipeg; Stanley Oddy (Anishinaabe), The Academy, 2008, private collection, Toronto; Ernie Mandamin (Anishinaabe), The One the Elders Kept from the School, 2018, Crooked Creek Art Bank, Ottawa; Joel Rickenbrick (Métis) and Yahk Allegra Johnson (Métis), George & The Eagle, 2024, courtesy of the artists; Alvin Ahenakew (Anishinaabe), The Wind Spirit, 1976, The Forks, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Jackie Kafegineis (Cree), Drumming Partridge, n.d., courtesy of Indians Earth, Toronto; Saul Williams (Anishinaabe), Untitled (Shaman and Raven), c.1962, private collection.

Publication Info: Art Canada Institute / Institut de l'art canadien, 1 Yonge Street, Suite 1801, Toronto, ON M5E 1W7, Canada. Art Canada Institute is a registered charity (BN 88811 2102 RR0001) and is funded entirely by donations from individuals, foundations and corporations. Art Canada Institute is committed to publishing in both official languages of Canada. Art Canada Institute is committed to publishing in both official languages of Canada. Art Canada Institute is committed to publishing in both official languages of Canada